I May this second cross of the Lord crucify all! These are the newest wounds of Christ. The tree of salvation is lost; foreigners violently overturn the sepulcher; full of people, the city stands widowed. The Goat ravishes the covenant of the Lamb; Sion the wife weeps for the lost dowries; Ananias is immolated; the horn of David is bent; the world is flogged. The unjust have rejected him by whom the world is justly judged.

II O how rightful to mourn: the King of all is banished; the staff of the faithful suffers the humiliation of infidels; the whole is yielding to a part. Already the royal land labors in mud and brick, and weeps that Moses is in toil. Man, have mercy on God; Son, defend the right of the Father; seek the certain amid the uncertain; deserve to earn the bounty of the leader of leaders, and garner the light of the true light.

III You who are marked with the sign of faith, assert your faith by deeds. Wear down the roaring whelps of lions; look with pitying heart on the sufferings of Christ, a sojourner long in Cedar. Rise up and see, lest you be rejected for unstable faith. Sweat, martyr, in the struggle in hope of crown and reward. With Babylon cast aside, fight for the heavenly country; compose yourself and fight for the water of life.

J.W.

I God renewed the world when in birth he was encased in the womb, who by his will and without further cause, created the seas and earth and air. This bush set afire but not consumed, the fleece of Gideon, the throne of Solomon—all these shone forth here, and by this form bear witness to him who was recovered from death and was recalled to life: man, who was darkened by vice, but now adorned with virtue.

II And so let the mother be praised, the virgin of virgins, redeemer of men, protector of all, cleanser of crimes, who conceived the Lord. She is the joy of the joyous and the solace for the lamenting; the breath of the breathless and the raising for those who have lapsed. I would be unwilling to beg for the things she offers: after this life, she wants to exalt in her home of splendrous light those whom a single offense had caught with the bitter fruit of death.

J.W.

I They run to the call and the jingle of money, for this is the voice that pleases. Everyone beyond what's legal (so example teaches) strives for the forbidden. Learn this custom and this error, and do the same thing for yourself. In this life, shirk nothing evil; live this way, never any other. You should live by the standards of a cleric who gives his censures out for tithes. Throw your net out for the capture when you see the harvest's ripe; reap right away through usury.

II If anyone among this people doesn't know how the world lives, when he sees it all, he should choose this side, or otherwise he'll decide nothing. Dare to do what you want with craft and cunning, the way Thais did. Give bad habits to the world. Truly I never believed that anything was to be shunned. Let nothing be constrained by law; nothing be pledged to right. Let this edict be sacred to you: where virtue is a crime, there is nothing left for God.

J.W.
